

Signage of the Jacobean routes in the western Iberian Peninsula, with concrete milestones and directional pedestrian signage, passing through the province of Seville.

The signaling of the Jacobean routes in the western Iberian Peninsula, specifically in the province of Seville, is a project of great importance that not only facilitates the navigation of pilgrims but also enhances the historical and cultural heritage of the region. These routes, which are part of the network of roads converging on the Camino de Santiago, have a deep spiritual and cultural significance for those who travel them. The province of Seville, rich in history and tradition, the Jacobean paths offer travelers a unique experience full of natural beauty and cultural discoveries.

The signaling of these routes, through concrete milestones and directional pedestrian signage, is crucial to ensure that pilgrims can navigate safely and efficiently along their journey. The concrete milestones, strategically placed at key points along the routes, not only indicate the direction to follow but also serve as symbolic markers of the path traveled and the path ahead.
